

False Accuser kills herself

Friday, 07 November 2014

It is absolutely time for a total review on sex crimes, their prosecution and the legal process.

It was inevitable that these kinds of things (the story about the girl who killed herself rather than face a false allegations trial) would develop as the false allegations industry exploded.

Do we really care about old historical offences? Should the law simply reject accusations without evidence?

It occupies police (the majority of whom hate these situations) and costs millions in court costs and prison expenses.

Without proof there should not be prosecutions. With proof - absolutely.

The time has come to tighten up the laws. Complain immediately, whilst there is evidence. Or seek psychiatric assistance otherwise.