

Lessons to be earned from the Tweed acquittal...

Wednesday, 28 April 2010

- 1) there are hundreds of false allegations - and most end in conviction, with the innocent having lives and careers destroyed (as teachers, doctors, priests, fosters... all vital roles in society for children).
- 2) the most profitable kinds of false allegations involve celebrities.
- 3) many false allegations concern consensual sex adapted to non consensual after the event.
- 4) the "every man is a rapist" brigade - a huge amount of feminists, some better concealed than others, will always hiss "he got away with it".
- 5) compensation should ONLY be paid to doctors and medical professionals to treat genuine health problems.
- 6) media should be banned from paying for stories about abuse. Ditto publishers. Neither the abusers nor the abused should benefit financially from the crime.
- 7) we need a statute of limitations like the rest of the world.
- 8) let us always remember and never forget - there are GENUINE victims and they should be believed - those of us who have suffered from liars should not go to the extreme, as so many abuse supporters do.
